5. Significant research grants and other awards received

During January-April 2006 I was invited by the Center for International Research on the Japanese Economy, University of Tokyo, to work as Visiting Professor. This is a highly competitive and prestigious award made to internationally known researchers. The award covered all expenses of travelling and living in Tokyo.

In 1996 I received a personal grant of £20000 from the European Community to pursue research on the political economy of money and credit. The grant was supplied by a special EU programme for the promotion of academic exchanges between European and Japanese universities, which makes provision for four European academics to visit Japan annually. The grant allowed me to visit the University of Tokyo for three months in the summer of 1996 to complete Political Economy of Money and Finance (co-authored with Makoto Itoh).

During the academic year 1993-4 I was invited by the University of Tokyo, the leading academic institution in Japan, to work as Visiting Associate Professor teaching Political Economy of Money and Credit. This is a prestigious invitation, annually advanced by the University of Tokyo to one academic from abroad.

10. Other significant evidence of academic leadership

In 2007 I took the initiative of establishing Research on Money and Finance (RMF) an international network of political economists focusing on money, finance and the evolution of contemporary capitalism. Since then RMF has become well-established and has organised several international conferences, seminars and lectures. It also runs a successful Discussion Paper series. Further information can be obtained on www.researchonmoneyandfinance.org. Perhaps the most significant output of RMF, however, has been three reports and a series of lesser interventions on the eurozone crisis. The output of RMF has been widely discussed in the international media and has led to TV, radio and other appearances.
