Topic: Academic Communication is an interdisciplinary Blended Intensive Programme (BIP) that brings together students from different countries and fields of study to strengthen their academic, intercultural, and digital communication skills. The programme combines interactive workshops, group projects, discussions, and presentations with periods of guided self-study. Its core idea is to create a space where students can experiment with different forms of academic communication, exchange perspectives, and reflect on how communication works in international and multicultural contexts.

A central focus is on developing practical competencies: delivering interactive seminar presentations, participating constructively in discussions, tailoring communication to diverse audiences, and giving and receiving feedback across cultural boundaries. Students also explore intercultural communication frameworks and apply them directly in international teams.

By blending online sessions with an intensive on-site week in Karlsruhe, the programme offers a dynamic learning environment that supports independent, collaborative, and inquiry-based learning. Depending on the interests of the cohort, outcomes may include short texts, presentations, posters, digital contributions, or joint reflection pieces—laying the groundwork for future international collaboration.
